

Liberty Once Lost is Lost Forever

Situation:

You live in the former Republic of Banat, a country that until recently had a constitution nearly identical to that of the United States; however, an ignorant and apathetic population, a weakened military, and an overly bureaucratic government left the country virtually defenseless to the intentions of a hostile foreign power; your country fell in less than two weeks. The new dictator is not insensitive to your way of life however. He has appointed you to a council to decide how your country will now be governed.

Your Task:

You have been given the task of keeping only five of the ten listed rights. The other five will be taken away from everyone. However, you must all be in agreement. If you do not unanimously agree on which of the rights to keep, all ten will be taken away. You have 15 minutes to make your decision.

Council Members:

Cross off the freedoms you intend to surrender:
